A standard used to be the auditor's business. Now it is everyone's.

Governments, banks, hospitals, laboratories and ministries across the region are adopting ISO management systems, and the work no longer sits with one department. Quality, security, risk, safety and data protection now touch almost every desk.

This half-day is where you start. It opens the entire field of ISO standards, whether you already work in an organisation or you are a student stepping into it for the first time. No prior experience is needed, only the willingness to learn.

You leave with the whole map and a clear sense of where you fit. From here the path is yours: the PECB Foundation, then Lead Implementer and Lead Auditor when you are ready to certify and audit for a living. As an ISO Ambassador, those next courses come at a 15% discount.

A training session in progress. Standards work is documentation, decisions and review, the daily habits of a well-run office.

Closer to the work than you think

A management system is mostly good practice, written down and followed. If you already work, you are probably doing several of these. If you are a student, these are the habits you will learn to name and master. Each one maps directly onto an ISO requirement.

Writing meeting minutes

Documented decisions and actions, the backbone of management review.

Assessing risks

Weighing what could go wrong and acting early, the heart of ISO 31000.

Keeping incident logs

Recording what happened and how it was resolved, so it informs the next decision.

Holding review meetings

Stepping back to ask whether the work is meeting its objectives.

Checking the work

Reviewing against a checklist or rule, exactly what an internal audit does.

Mapping a process

Setting out how work flows from start to finish, the first step of any system.

01 The whole landscape

A guided tour of the world of ISO standards, so you see the full field before choosing any one part of it.

02 The structure they share

Every modern standard is built on the same skeleton. Learn it once and you can read any of them.

03 What a management system is

And what an Integrated Management System is when an organisation runs several standards together.

04 The major standards, in plain terms

Quality, information security, AI, safety, risk and laboratories, each explained for a non-specialist.

05 Where you fit

How your role already connects to standards work, and what you can apply on Monday morning.

06 The path beyond

The route from awareness to Foundation, then Lead Implementer and Lead Auditor when you are ready.

Every standard, one map

The session connects the standards that matter most in Uganda today.
